Progress Report: InforMe

A. User Stories Implemented

- As a user, I would like to be able to visit InforMe through my web browser so that I can use it on the go.
- As a user, I would like for the domain name to be catchy so that I can remember it easily.
- As a user, I would like for the URL input box to properly connect to the database, so that I can send my URL for summarization.
- As a user, I would like for text to be displayed to the page with real-time updates.
- As a user, I would like to be able to submit a URL and be given a short summary of the article I gave.
- As a user, I would like for the article to be saved in the backend to be retrieved by other users later.

B. Group Pairings [Name (github_handle)]

Website Team:
- Ernest Besse (toygeron)
- Dexter Ketchum (silcore)

Android Team:
- Davis Phillips (snverse)
- Moises Figueroa (mf11y)

Back-End Parsing Team:
- Austin Casale (saleac)

C. Design Changes, Unit Test Changes, and Other Notes

We encountered some difficulties during this iteration of the project, largely due to the inability for our webserver to handle post requests to the python processing files. In order to circumvent this, we removed nginx and replaced it with apache, which should allow for the proper post requests to go through.

Originally, the plan was to use a separate language server to host our backend python script. After having multiple issues and worrying about efficiency we finally decided it would be best to consolidate the backend and frontend on the same server. It saves the hassle of cross domain HTTP requests and will cut back on overall upkeep since the backend itself is not incredibly large.

The backend only uses a few python modules: beautifulsoup, requests, nltk, heapq, collections, etc… The only non basic packages are nltk, bs4 (beautifulsoup), and requests. The entire nltk package isn't required as well so the overall memory that is required for the backend is relatively low and not incredibly intensive. It makes much more sense hosted on the same server on my opinion.
